Stavroula Prantsoudi holds a Degree in Computer Science (Aristotle University of Thessaloniki), Master' s Degrees in "Information Systems" (University of Macedonia) and "Didactics of Mathematics, Science, and ICT in Education: Interdisciplinary Approach" (University of the Aegean), and a PhD in "Computer Science Teaching" (University of the Aegean).

She is a scientific collaborator of the Learning Technology and Educational Engineering Laboratory (http://ltee.aegean.gr) since 2016 and has participated in numerous international research projects. She has published articles in international and Greek scientific journals, in proceedings of international and Greek conferences and chapters in edited volumes. She has served as a member of organizational and scientific committees of conferences, workshops, and the organization of the International Challenge on Informatics and Computational Thinking "Bebras" in Greece.

She teaches Computer Science and ICT courses in all types and levels of educational structures, since 2003, and in the MSc "Didactics of Mathematics, Science, and ICT in Education: Interdisciplinary Approach" of the University of the Aegean. She also is the Principal of a General Upper Secondary school.

Her research interests include, among others, Computer Science Teaching, Computational Thinking, teacher's training and professional development, interdisciplinary education, curriculum design and Artificial Intelligence in education.