

George Kritikos is an Assistant Professor at the Department of Preschool Education and Educational Design at the University of the Aegean. He holds a degree in Physics (2001) and a Master's degree in "Electronic Physics and Radioelectrology (Telecommunications)" (2004) from Aristotle University of Thessaloniki. He also holds a Master's degree in "Models of Design and Development of Educational Units" (2006) and a PhD in Physics Education using ICT (2013) from the University of the Aegean. He conducted postdoctoral research at the University of the Aegean in the field of Educational Engineering (2020).

From 2014 to 2017, he taught as an adjunct lecturer in postgraduate programs of the Department of Preschool Education and Educational Design, while from 2017 to 2025 he was a faculty member at the Department of Preschool Education and Educational Design. From 2005 to 2017 he worked as a Science teacher in secondary education and served as the head of the Laboratory Center of Physical Sciences of the southern Dodecanese from 2014 to 2017.

His research interests lie on the fields of Conceptual Representations Development, Curricula, Science Education, ICT in Education, Systems Thinking, and Educational Engineering. He has published articles in scientific journals, as well as in Greek and international conferences. More information can be found on his personal webpage: ltee.aegean.gr/gkritikos.